Former Tesla Analyst Joins ClearPath Policy Team

Washington, DC – Thursday, September 3, 2020 – ClearPath announced Savita Bowman has joined as a Policy Analyst at ClearPath. She will work across ClearPath's clean energy technology portfolio, with a focus on energy storage, carbon capture, and direct air capture policies.

"We are incredibly excited to have Savita join our policy team, where she brings a wealth of experience in scaling up clean energy innovation through engagement with policymakers, utilities, government, and private companies to bolster a clean energy future," said Rich Powell, Executive Director of ClearPath.

Prior to joining ClearPath, Savita was a Business Resolution Analyst at Tesla, where she managed pre-litigation solar and storage assets across North America and conducted risk mitigation assessments to resolve issues ranging from system performance discrepancies to contractual disputes.

Her background also includes studying carbon capture technology and policy at Columbia University as well as consulting for Pöyry, where she reviewed the feasibility of biomass energy deployment in Southeast Asia, and the United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) researching the impacts of bauxite mining in Guinea.
