ClearPath Hires Jeremy Harrell As Policy Director

Former Heller energy aide joins growing D.C. office

WASHINGTON, April 25, 2017 -- ClearPath has hired Jeremy Harrell as policy director as part of the broader growth of the organization's Washington, D.C., staff and operations.

"Bringing Jeremy onboard further deepens our expertise in clean and conservative baseload power," ClearPath Executive Director Rich Powell said. "His extensive experience in both chambers of Congress also lends weight to our focus on spurring action on Capitol Hill."

Harrell comes to ClearPath from Sen. Dean Heller's office, where he advised the Nevada Republican on energy, environmental and other policies. He was previously legislative director for Rep. Paul Gosar (R-Ariz.) and a legislative assistant to Rep. Michael Turner (R-Ohio). He graduated from Miami University in Oxford, Ohio, with degrees in political science and history.

He joins ClearPath on the heels of January's hire of veteran House GOP aide Jeff Morehouse as the organization's director of government affairs and a key partner to Managing Director-Government Affairs Zak Baig in working with House Republicans and the Trump administration.
