Veteran House GOP aide expands DC-based conservative clean energy effort

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5, 2017 -- ClearPath has tapped veteran House GOP aide Jeff Morehouse as the organization's director of government affairs.

In that role, Morehouse will help lead ClearPath's growing DC-based effort to work with the new Congress and President-elect Donald Trump's administration on conservative clean energy policies.

"Jeff provides an immediate boost to our already-strengthening campaign," ClearPath Founder and CEO Jay Faison said. "His impressive background, including his strong expertise in energy policy, will be a huge addition to our effort."

He will be a key partner to ClearPath Managing Director-Government Affairs Zak Baig in working not just with House Republicans but also the Trump administration.

Morehouse since 2010 has been chief of staff for Rep. Bill Flores, including managing the Texas Republican's successful campaign to chair the conservative Republican Study Committee last Congress. Morehouse was also executive director of the House Conservatives Fund, overseeing the Republican leadership PAC for the 2014 election cycle.

He was also a primary liaison for Flores on the House Energy and Commerce Committee.

Morehouse was previously legislative director for Rep. John Culberson and served other roles for the Texas Republican beginning in 2003. Among his honors, Morehouse received the 2014 Congressional Hispanic Leadership Institute Chief of Staff Appreciation Award.
